WHAT ARE THE ACTIVATION UNITS?

The difference in each Airnergy device is in the number of activation units contained within each machine. The Wellness Basis Plus device has two activation units, the Professional three and the Professional Plus, Avant Garde and Travel Plus devices have four activation units. The activation units inside the device are part of the energy generation process. Each activation unit contains a wavelength of red light and a catalyst. When air is pulled into the Airnergy device via a filter, the oxygen molecules are changed in the activation chambers from their normal triplet state to singlet oxygen. Singlet oxygen lives for less than a nanosecond, goes back to its ground state and as it does so releases energy. The more activation units in the Airnergy device, the more energy is therefore produced. This is especially important for those who are chronically ill and of the older generation. It is not just the time spent on the device which is important; it is the intensity of therapy which is more important. That's why we advise people to take an Airnergy device with as many activation units as they can afford. Some ask "Why not more activation units for even greater intensity?" But 15 years of evidence, studies, experience and knowledge tells us that the optimum number for the human body is a maximum of four. No additional benefit can be gained by having more than this.
